Ms Carolina Saira, a student of the University of Malaysia, said the conference was a platform for academics and practitioners to share ideas and insights.

"This is the way to gather the brains for the future development of a particular field, in this case, international commerce," she suggested.

The conference theme, she said, was "Emerging Mega-trends in Asian Market." According to Dr Shariff, the recent conference augurs well for the future of international trade as evidenced by the working papers this time round. He said the conference served as a platform for the academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to present their viewpoints and research findings on present-day business and market issues.

The conference itself was a step in the right direction for the Labuan School of International Business and Finance (AIBC) in the context of conferences and seminars, which are not just from local universities but also from the international academe.

Ms Carolina Saira, a student of the University of Malaysia, said the conference was a platform for academics and practitioners to share ideas and insights.

"This is the way to gather the brains for the future development of a particular field, in this case, international commerce," she suggested.

The conference theme, she said, was "Emerging Mega-trends in Asian Market." According to Dr Shariff, the recent conference augurs well for the future of international trade as evidenced by the working papers this time round. He said the conference served as a platform for the academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to present their viewpoints and research findings on present-day business and market issues.

The conference itself was a step in the right direction for the Labuan School of International Business and Finance (AIBC) in the context of conferences and seminars, which are not just from local universities but also from the international academe.

Ms Carolina Saira, a student of the University of Malaysia, said the conference was a platform for academics and practitioners to share ideas and insights.

"This is the way to gather the brains for the future development of a particular field, in this case, international commerce," she suggested.

The conference theme, she said, was "Emerging Mega-trends in Asian Market." According to Dr Shariff, the recent conference augurs well for the future of international trade as evidenced by the working papers this time round. He said the conference served as a platform for the academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to present their viewpoints and research findings on present-day business and market issues.

The conference itself was a step in the right direction for the Labuan School of International Business and Finance (AIBC) in the context of conferences and seminars, which are not just from local universities but also from the international academe.

Ms Carolina Saira, a student of the University of Malaysia, said the conference was a platform for academics and practitioners to share ideas and insights.

"This is the way to gather the brains for the future development of a particular field, in this case, international commerce," she suggested.

The conference theme, she said, was "Emerging Mega-trends in Asian Market." According to Dr Shariff, the recent conference augurs well for the future of international trade as evidenced by the working papers this time round. He said the conference served as a platform for the academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to present their viewpoints and research findings on present-day business and market issues.

The conference itself was a step in the right direction for the Labuan School of International Business and Finance (AIBC) in the context of conferences and seminars, which are not just from local universities but also from the international academe.